FAMILY AND FRIENDS CARING CARD

Are you worried about someone's substance use?

It's hard when you're worried and don't know what to do. Substance use is a complicated topic, you are not alone in this journey. Our community is here with you.

The question, "What is wrong with you?" can cause feelings of self-blame and embarrassment, which can lead to hiding a behavioural or substance use disorder. This is stigma. The stigma of addiction makes things worse. Stigma says that problems with addiction are shameful. It makes people want to hide their addiction. Stigma can also make families of people with addiction hide the problem. When people hide, they can't get help. Stigma is still the biggest barrier to addiction treatment faced by people.

Words are powerful

A person's substance use does not define them, it is one part of their life experience. Using words like addict and junkie can label a person in a negative way. Under it all, your friend or family member is the same person. Knowing how to have calm, caring talks without judgment can really help you and your loved one.

ABBOTSFORD

Substance use can sometimes affect a person's life. This can cause problems for a person, their friends, and their family. If someone close to you has opened up about their substance use or their substance use was unexpectedly discovered, there are a few ways you can help with their safety planning.

Within your comfort level, offer to help them to:

- Understand they may be at risk from the poisoned illicit drug supply
- Find services that can help reduce the risk with harm reduction supplies
- Learn not to use alone - most overdoses happen in private homes
- Know about using the Mobile Lifeguard App

The word abuse creates stigma

- It's not helpful to blame anyone for an illness
- Addictions are connected to pain, trauma, environment, and genetics
- Substances can alter brain chemistry
- Addictions are biological, psychological and social disorders
- Those who sell and promote addictive substances have a responsibility too

The word habit also creates stigma

- It makes us think that a person struggling with an addiction lacks willpower
- People with substance use disorders need our support
